

Reducing Unnecessary Regulatory Burdens on Business: Logistics

1. What the MPC has been asked to do

The 10th Malaysia Plan has mandated Malaysia Productivity Corporation (MPC) to carry out regulatory review in order to make it easier to do business in Malaysia. In relation to this, the Malaysia Service Development Council (MSDC) has asked the MPC to review the regulation of the National Logistics and Supply Chain. This review process will draw on the expertise and perspectives of the public and private sectors to help identify key issues and the appropriate solutions.

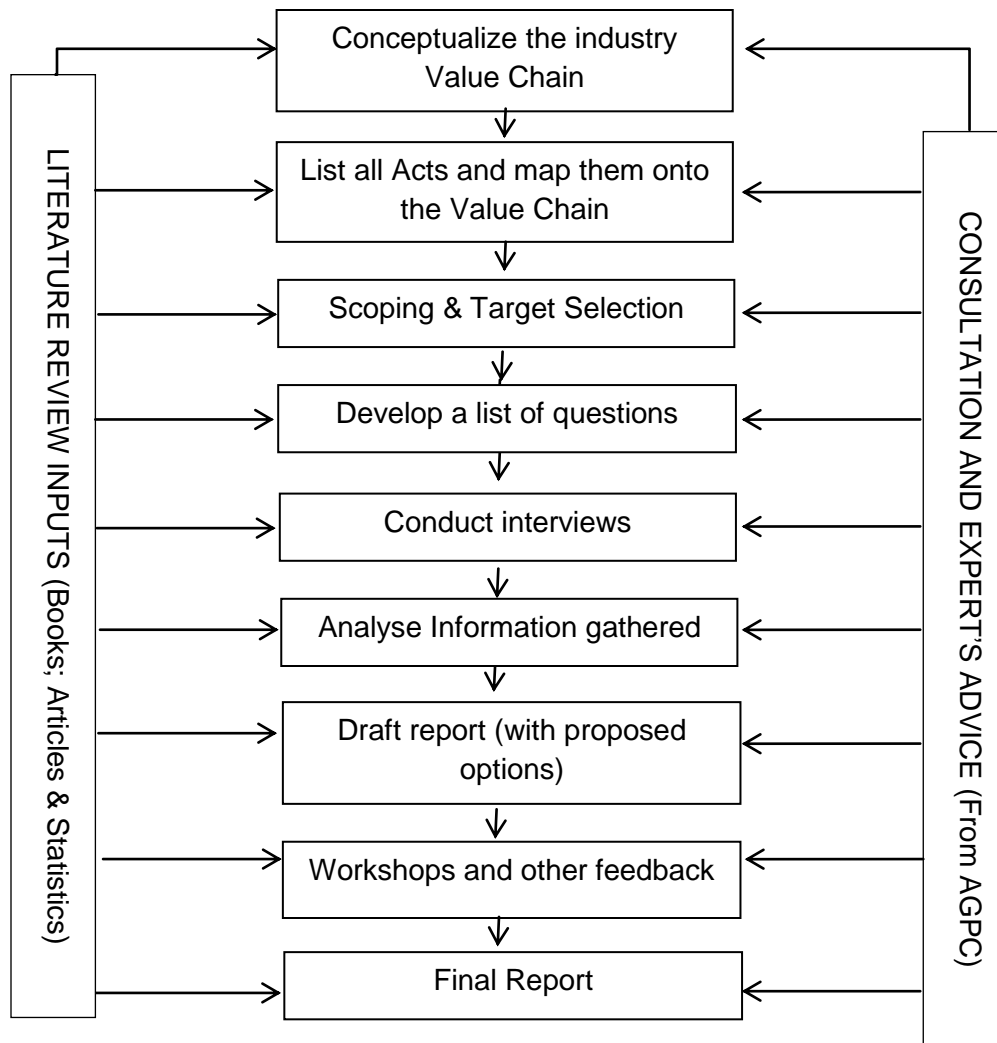

2. Conduct of the review

The study will emulate the approach used by the Australian Government Productivity Commission (AGPC) and the team will be guided by a regulatory expert Ms. Sue Holmes. The team will select a sample of businesses from the Logistics and Supply Chain operating across the country and at state and national borders. The team will interview the senior management personnel to identify the regulatory issues of concern. Based on the principles of good regulatory practices, the team will formulate feasible options for further deliberation. These issues and options will be subject to further consultation with relevant stakeholders in order to develop concrete recommendations that will reduce unnecessary regulatory burdens. The figure below summarizes the study process for this review.

3. Timing

This review commenced in May 2014 and has started with canvassing interested parties about concerns with written regulation and its administration.
